“ Because I was 8 years older than Gary, at our Piper family get-togethers he spent time with the "younger" cousins (and me with the "older" ones). However, especially as we grew older, we always sensed a closeness between us that I think came from the special bond between his mother Stella and my father Andy--they had survived the Great Depression in the 1930's without a father in the house, and the experience, as difficult as it must have been, created the close bond that lasted a lifetime. I always admired Gary for the courage he showed in dealing with his life-long illness, Type 1 diabetes. Not many of would have the fortitude to go through life as Gary did, constantly monitoring his blood sugar and self-administering insulin every day. In spite of the hardship, he had a successful work career and made a good life for his family. I will miss him greatly.
